

energizeEASTSIDE

quick facts

Puget Sound Energy (PSE) is the company that provides power to your neighborhood. Energize Eastside is a project that will build a new power substation in Bellevue and a new electric transmission line from Redmond to Renton.

Why is Energize Eastside needed?

The number of people living and working on the Eastside is growing. This growth is straining our electric system. The chance of power outages will increase, unless PSE upgrades the system.

Where will PSE build Energize Eastside?

PSE is looking at several different options for where the new line could go. The map to the right shows which areas, or segments, are being considered. PSE needs to build several of these segments to make a new line. The new line will connect a power substation in Redmond called Sammamish to one in Renton called Talbot Hill. The project will also build a new substation at one of three possible places, shown as white triangles on the map.

The colored lines labeled with letters are the possible route segments. There are 16 segments, and we need to choose which ones to build. The segments must connect to make a line from the Sammamish substation to the Talbot Hill substation. The substations are shown as black triangles on the map.

How power gets to your home

What will Energize Eastside do?

PSE looked at several options to make sure the Eastside has stable power. The only way to solve the problem is to continue meeting our aggressive conservation goals and build a new transmission line. A transmission line is a group of wires on tall poles that can move power from one place to another. This new line will bring more power to the cities of Redmond, Kirkland, Bellevue, Newcastle and Renton.
